

In Memory Of
Jay Strom

Jay L Strom

Feb 1, 1937-Oct 23, 2020

He was an intelligent man of few words, but when he got “an idea in his head” there was no stopping him. He’d surround himself with the latest information and technology and go for it. His sons (all Engineers) often called him a “frustrated engineer” because he understood how things worked (in both mechanics and business) and came up with innovative ways to change them. Jay and Marg both paid close attention to the world around them and ensured that this understanding and interest has been instilled in their sons and grandkids.
